Free Will Decisions - Motivation For Life

The entire decision making process is subject to one's will. He can choose to become more proficient in his decision making or he can choose to stifle it. He has to make a choice, but he is free to choose from the alternatives. In any case, he is not free from the results of the decision. Since his will is free to choose and does in fact choose, it is the cause of our actions. Keep in mind

Our text suggests that objective reality is often significantly different from perceived reality and is an important variable to consider when making decisions within an organization. In addition, attribution theory describes how people create the explanations for their own and others actions, as well as the outcomes of the applied behaviors. Based on these two premises, analyze and discuss
